

Interjet Airlines Temporarily Suspending All International Flights Effective March 24, 2020

- Decision to end international flights follows announcement that the U.S. will close its borders with Mexico as well as significant reductions in other international traffic. Interjet will continue flying intra-Mexico.

MEXICO CITY, March 23, 2020 Interjet Airlines confirmed today, it is suspending all international passenger flights for the foreseeable future, effective March 24 and until March 31, 2020, subject to regulatory restrictions imposed by each country and the demand for each flight. and until in its effort to combat the spread of the coronavirus. Interjet will continue to serve its domestic markets.

“For us, nothing is more important than the health and safety of our customers and employees,” said William Shaw, CEO of Interjet Airlines. “While this is not a decision we took lightly, it is the right one given the worldwide pandemic and spread of COVID-19. We will continue to assess the situation daily and when the time is right, we will be back to flying internationally,” he added.

Interjet’s decision to end international flights followed the announcement that the U.S. will close its borders with Mexico as well as significant reductions in air travel to and from the airline’s other international destinations it serves.
